

ANNE MARTIN, FAMOUS WOMAN SUFFRAGIST, EXPLAINS WHY THE HUNGER STRIKE IN CAPITAL

Miss Anne Martin of Reno, vice chairman of the National Women's party and chairman of its legislative committee spoke before an attentive audience at the Maids' and Matrons' club rooms at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Among the many points covered by Miss Martin in her speech was picketing in Washington and why the women consider this an effective means of bringing about the desired aims of the suffragists. She said:

"In answer to the questions 'Have the pickets done any good?' and 'Do you think you are gaining anything by picketing?' I have to say that I know the pickets have done good. I know that woman suffrage would be a lost and forgotten issue in this time of war if it had not been for the pickets. The pickets have kept the subject of suffrage before the people—and the president. There may have been other ways in which that could have been done. Picketing was the most effective way we could discover. We have gained 40 votes in congress since picketing began in January."

"Delegations and rolls of petitions to the White House had failed, picketing offered a dramatic and constant appeal. There is no law against it in the District of Columbia. There could be no law against it as the right of peaceful petition is guaranteed by the constitution. In order to arrest the pickets the administration and the captain of the District police appointed by the administration have had to trample up the repeatedly disproved charge of "obstructing traffic."

Miss Martin also said: "Miss Alice Paul began her hunger strike because she and her comrades, for demanding better air in the district jail, were put in small 5 by 7 cells in solitary confinement without air and denied the right to buy their own food, to have books and newspapers and to see their friends. These privileges are all given other prisoners in jail, including seven murderers. When the suffragist political prisoners are given the same rights as other prisoners, Miss Paul states, the hunger strike will close."

"Forcible feeding is a practice condemned by reputable physicians as cruel and as making the health of the prisoners really a method of torturing prisoners. Miss Paul did not accept food voluntarily, but the tubes were forced in her mouth and she was physically overpowered and fed, the statement of the jail physician notwithstanding."

Matrons' club rooms in the Utah National Bank building, Miss Anne Martin, prominent suffragist of Nevada and the nation is addressing the ladies of the city.

SACRED HEART NEWS OF THE WEEK

Very popular are the juniors at Sacred Heart, for again they have shown their marvelous capability for entertaining. On Wednesday, October 31, before entering the dining room where a dainty Halloween supper awaited them, the seniors were presented with programs made by the artistic juniors. So much did the original folders promise that the girls could hardly wait to reach the gymnasium. On entering the pretty little hall they were confident that if the plans for their entertainment were as well carried out as had been the decorative scheme, the evening was certain to be a delightful one, and they were not disappointed. After two happy hours of dancing the girls were served delicious refreshments. Still another surprise was in store for them, when the juniors announced that they would vote for the best senior. Their decision would prove that Miss Frances McCormick must be very good to the little girls. They then decided that the most popular senior was Loretta Richle. Mildred Miles was declared by the older girls to be the most popular junior. Father Sullivan, who thoughtfully looked in upon the fun, added much pleasure to the occasion by his presence. The oldest senior, and the youngest minor were equally happy, and even the juniors were not too busy entertaining to thoroughly enjoy themselves.

Last week brought the conclusion of the October devotions, which have been most faithfully attended. However, the girls of Sacred Heart are not spasmodic Christians, delighting only in special kind of devotions, but with the same zeal with which they had said the Rosary, they started the month of November by receiving Communion for the holy souls, and making countless visits to the chapel during the days of special grace.

Father Lagan, who has been visiting in Eureka, was joyfully received at Sacred Heart and on November 1 he celebrated his three Masses in the academy chapel.

Scarcely a week has passed that did not hold some of the most surprising for the fortunate graduates. Last Sunday, on returning from their afternoon walk, the favored girls found Father Lagan and Father Sullivan waiting to take them for a ride in the Hippomobile. Through the kindness of these ever-thoughtful friends, the class had the pleasure of seeing Ogden canyon in all its autumnal glory, and came back for supper glowing with happiness.

The class of '18 is rejoicing in the satisfaction that two months of work are successfully finished. The girls attaining the highest averages in their mental philosophy, literature, astronomy, history and English are Aletha Hunter, Inez Allen and Katherine Kilmer.

On Friday afternoon the second academics thoroughly reviewed their English literature in a successful test. The girls especially deserving of credit are Margery Mullen, Thelma Parsons, Pauline Sparks and Hazel Abbey.

The beginners in the business course took their first test in shorthand during the week, and the Misses Beesie Palmer and Estelle Covert were most successful.

On Tuesday evening the third academics, anxious to do something for Mother Pauline's entertainment, gave a most thorough and artistic presentation of Ben Hur, with the aid of stereopticon views of the play. Each member of the class told a portion of the story in a manner highly creditable to the young ladies, considering the difficulties of extemporaneous speaking, and the fact that this was their first public appearance as a class. The kindly guest of honor was Vincent Chautauqua Circle.

The meeting of the Vincent Chautauqua circle was especially entertaining and instructive on Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Vincent Chautauqua. The program was a textbook under discussion, "Characters and Events in Roman History," by Guglielmo Ferrero, was divided into sections and handled as follows: "Corruption in Ancient Rome," Mrs. David Jensen.

"Anthony and Cleopatra," Mrs. Marie Green.

"The Development of Gaul," Mrs. Georgina Marriott.

"Nero," Miss Arthelia Mathis.

A general review was given by Mrs. George Kelly, after which an illuminating talk was given by Mrs. Georgina Marriott covering her visit to the beautiful home of Chautauqua at Chautauqua, N. Y. Mrs. Marriott described also a visit with the secretary of Chautauqua, Mrs. Ida B. Cole, in her Boston home. It was Mrs. Marriott's and Mrs. Cole's privilege to attend a banquet given by the Hurlbert circle of Boston, which had been in existence thirty-five years. The banquet was given in celebration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the organization. Among its charter members was a lady of past 80 years of age. Her gray-haired daughter was also a member of the circle.

The proverbial culture of Boston, so well seasoned with the democratic spirit of Chautauqua, was delightfully portrayed by Mrs. George Kelly. At this meeting of the circle an animated discussion was held following the review of the chapters of the book so far taken up. Mrs. George Kelly presided.

Powell is the chairman of the entertainment committee.

GRATITUDE'S OFFERING.
A Song of Thanksgiving and Love. Autumn dances through the woodlands. Weaves a charm on distant hills. Throws a veil across the mountains. And a song of triumph thrills.

Blue or gray her eyes, we know not; In their depths a mystic light. Half recalls the Spring-days' promise—Half portends the Winter's night.

Through her tears she smiles in gladness. And her smiles fade into tears; For she knows the past and future, While she sings their hopes and fears.

Autumn crows the year with beauty. Paints the woods with sunset's glow; Lights her torch with golden splendor. Where the morning-star burns low.

Then she floods the earth with sunshine. Turns the Summer's green to gold; Rocks to sleep thy baby leaf-buds—

Wraps them safe from Winter's cold.
Soft as starlight falls the music
In the silver sound of rain.
As the wind on forest harp-strings
Strikes a glad thanksgiving strain.

For the fruitful harvest gathered,
For country great and strong,
For the peace that springs from freedom,
For the Right that conquers Wrong.

Like year, life has its autumn—
Has its days of sweet content,
When the seed of springtime ripens
Through the joy and sorrow sent.

When the heart of man is strengthened
By the work his hands have sought;
When he reaps at last the harvest
Of the good his patience wrought.

He, too, sings a glad thanksgiving
And its echoes sound above,
As he turns from things created
To the Uncreated Love!

You have reached the golden autumn
Of your Apostolic life,
And the fruitful years have brought you
Tears and laughter, peace and strife.

But the tears and strife were hidden
Deep that none but God might know;
While you kept the smiles for others—
Theirs the pleasure, yours the woe.
